Research Panel Session: Social Media and International News Reporting: Responses and Case Studies

Moderating/Presiding: Andrea Hickerson, Rochester Institute of Technology

Panelists: Ammina Kothari, Rochester Institute of Technology
Amy Schmitz Weiss, San Diego State
Andrea Hickerson, Rochester Institute of Technology Javier Garza Ramos, Editor, El Siglo de Torreon
Nahed Eltantawy, High Point

Recent international news coverage of events such as the Arab Spring and Japanese earthquake and tsunami involved the use of mobile-enhanced social media for news sourcing and to raise awareness. While citizen-generated information is increasingly becoming an important source of story ideas and news content for international news, which in turn influence public opinion and foreign policies, the ability to post information anonymously, increases challenges for journalists looking for credible sources of information. The panelists will focus on theoretical and empirical relationships between the use of social media and international news sourcing and will address issues of ethics, digital divide and news production routines. Collectively, the five panelists investigate the role of social media in international reporting with their empirical analyses of the Kony 2012 campaign, Egyptian revolution, news reporting in Mexican press and Hispanic media in the U.S.
