Please email this completed form to ESIG Vice Head Kelsey Whipple at kwhipple@umass.edu. Deadline: October 7, 2022

Dear ESIG members:

I know it feels like the last AEJMC conference just happened, but we're already looking for panel proposals for the 2023 AEJMC 2023 conference in Washington DC. Do you have a fantastic idea for a research, teaching or PF&R session dedicated to entertainment studies in some way? Submit it to us as a panel idea!

For your panel proposal, please complete the following information:

Proposed panel title: Please write it so that it is both clear to understand and broad enough that other groups will be interested in co-sponsoring it.

Panel type: Which one of the three categories below best describes your panel idea?
- Research panels discuss issues of theoretical and practical relevance to our field among experts credentialed by their academic research, industry research and/or professional field experience.
- Teaching panels focus on pedagogy and classroom experiences.
- PF&R panels focus on free expression, ethics, institutional criticism, diversity, and public service in media and on our campuses.

Potential co-sponsors: Suggest another AEJMC division or interest group (or a few) that you think would be a good co-sponsor for this topic. For a full list of options, visit: http://www.aejmc.org/home/about/groups/.

Brief explanation of panel idea: Describe your panel with a brief description that includes its goals, significance, timeliness and how it might support ESIG's mission (300 words or fewer).

Possible panelists: Please suggest 2-3 preliminary names and include their affiliations. But don't worry if you don't have ideas for a full panel of people yet. We can lock in exact panelists at a later date.

Possible moderator: Suggest someone (include name and affiliation) to moderate this panel.

Contact person: Provide the name, affiliation, email and phone number for the person proposing the panel. If you're proposing the panel, that's you.

If you have any questions at all — or if you're ready to submit your panel idea — email ESIG Vice Head Kelsey Whipple at kwhipple@umass.edu.
